Abstract—This paper presents a novel approach to image segmentation using deep convolutional neural networks. We propose a modified U-Net architecture with attention gates that improves segmentation accuracy on medical imaging datasets. Experimental results show that our method outperforms existing state-of-the-art techniques by a significant margin.

Index Terms—image segmentation, deep learning, convolutional neural networks, attention mechanism

I. Introduction

Image segmentation is a fundamental task in computer vision with applications in medical imaging, autonomous driving, and remote sensing. Recent advances in deep learning have led to significant improvements in segmentation performance.

II. Related Work

Several approaches have been proposed for image segmentation. Fully convolutional networks (FCN) were among the first to apply deep learning to this problem. U-Net introduced skip connections between encoder and decoder layers.

III. Proposed Method

Our method builds upon the U-Net architecture. We add attention gates to the skip connections to suppress irrelevant features.

IV. Experiments

We evaluate our method on three datasets. The results are presented in Table I.

V. Conclusion

We have presented a novel attention-based U-Net for image segmentation. Experimental results demonstrate its effectiveness.

From the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Mysore, Revenue Department, To the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Dept., No. 2646—Rev. 45, dated 25th June 1879.

With reference to the correspondence noted in the margin, I am directed by the Chief Commissioner to state that on a further consideration, it appears to him that Inam title-deeds are not liable to stamp duty. These deeds were regarded as conveyances and so held liable to the duty, but the revised Stamp Act I of 1879 now distinctly defines conveyances to be transfers of property on sale. From the title-deeds, forms of which have already been forwarded with this Office letter No. 5382—10 R., dated 12th October 1878, it will be seen that the transactions involved in the Inam settlement and recorded in the title-deeds are not of the nature of sales. They cannot even be regarded as gifts as no new grants in gift are thereby made. There is first an acknowledgment of the already existing right of the grantee to the tenure, and secondly, whenever the inams are enfranchised, there is the renunciation of the reversionary rights of the Government in the inams in consideration of an additional quit-rent stipulated to be paid. No stamp is provided in the Act for the former, and the renunciation of the Government claims on the inams could only fall under the head of "Release," No. 54 of Schedule I, which is exempt from stamp duty when Government is the executor of the document.

Letter to do No. 5382—10 R., dated 12th October 1878.

2. In the above view of the subject, Mr. Gordon proposes not to require a stamp duty on the title-deeds issued under the Inam settlement.
